Crisis Survivor signs Regus for Business Continuity Support

Crisis Survivor has signed an agreement with Regus, a deal which adds the world's largest provider of outsourced workspaces to its panel of specialised business continuity support providers.

With over 1,000 offices across 75 countries, Regus provides organisations with the means to enable their staff to work wherever, however and whenever they need, a central part of which is providing on-demand office workplace recovery solutions. Regus is a recognised disaster recovery specialist in the re-housing of clients' critical personnel following denial of access to their premises as a result of disasters such as fire, flooding and terrorism.

As well as access to key restoration services, such as telephony, IT recovery and physical remediation from Crisis Survivor's panel of specialised providers, the new relationship also gives Crisis Survivor clients priority for re-housing in Regus centres across Britain. Clients will also benefit from Crisis Survivor's unique insurance policy, 'First Action', which provides both immediate financial support and an insured, immediate crisis management service.

Sean O' Reilly, Disaster Recovery Manager for Regus, says: "In the event of a crisis, a company's number one priority is business continuity. Our support service has been honed over the past 20 years across all six continents and is, we believe, second to none. Our capability extends to our ever-expanding global network in 450 cities with an intelligent and well-resourced service. With this new relationship, Crisis Survivor clients can gain control more quickly and more capably."

Tony Gimple, Managing Director of Crisis Survivor, adds; "We are delighted to be working with Regus. This important partnership adds Regus's unrivalled services to our suite of providers, while putting their customers in a position of strength with access to our unique packaged crisis management services. I believe that our fully integrated approach will be unrivalled in the market place."
